Winchester.

Winchester to-day. held under the auspices of the General Turner Ashby Camp and Daughters of the Confederacy, it being the forty-ninth anniversary of Ashby's death.

The graves of about 3,000 Confederate soldlers, including the tomb of the Ashby brothers. in Stonewall Cometery, were decorated with flowers and Southern flags.

The principal address was delivered by Colonel Robert E. Lee, of Fairfax, grandson of the commander of the Confederate armies, who, on account of the threatening weather, spoke from the City Hall stops.

In the parade, of which Brigadier-General R. D. Funkhouser, of Maurertown, was chief 'marshal, were camps of veterans from the Valley of Virginia, Sons of Veterans, cadets of Shenandoah Valley military academies, Daughters of the Confederacy, the entire Winchester fire department, and public school children.

Winchester is the only place in the United States, where National and Confederate cemeteries are so close, nothing but a narrow lane dividing them.

A large informal reception was attended to the confederacy of the Confedera combat, pistol shots were exchanged Sunday night at Eagle Rock, in this county, that inflicted mortal wounds upon J. B. Robertson, and a painful llow Miss Hicks escaped injury is a matter of wonder. She had rushed to the aid of Montague with a buggy whigh in her hand, striking the pistol arm of Robertson with the whip in such a way that the bullet went into Montague, with the whip in such a way that the bullet went into Montague, with Miss Hicks, and Robertson, with his sister, Clarice, reached the Hicks home after attending a wedding celebration in the neighborhood. Robertson charged Montague with having taked about Robertson and his sister.

The pistol duel followed. Robertson opening fire, it is said. Miss Hicks rushed in with the buggy whip. Two bullets from Montague's gun hit Robertson, one shattering his chin, and the other taking effect in his chest He soon died. A final shot by Robertson, after he was mutally wounded, tore through Miss Hicks's desse, without wounding her. The preliminally hearing for Montague is to, be held on Thursday of this week. There will be no effort for all. Both young men were well known in their community, and Montague is said to gtand expectally well. Miss Hicks is a daughter of E. H.
